The President admits that Federal soldiers can not be so employed, and the question whether a post comitatus of bystanders or citizens is armed or unarmed is trivial. "An armed post comitatus would imply deliberate preparation by the Marshal to employ force before any occasion had arisen. But if the Marshal organizes an armed force of bysefore any occasion had arisen. But if the Marshal organizes an armed force of by-standers to be used as a posse comitatus, there will naturally be an armed force of the will naturally be an armed force of mere will naturally be an armed force of residents, and the party which is strongest in the election precinct will carry the day. If one party goes to the polls armed, both parties will, and when the Marshal summons his posse, he is as likely to be whipped as to succeed. It is idle and ridiculous for the President to insist that such a passe may bear arms, when there is no likelinoud that one will ever be summoned. There is nothing in the vetoed army bill to obstruct the emplonent of an astamed pose comitatus, and an armed one. warmed powe comitatus, and an armed one taken from accidental bystanders about the polls would be out of the usual course. of things. We must therefore, regard this part of President Hayes' argument as weak and strained. His really strong wal and strained. His really strong pointles in his assertion that under the area as they stand, Federal soldiers can ast be employed at the polls. The Demorats are making 'much and about nothing. The President has dextrously defined them of their new party issue by smonstrating that the army cannot be sed at the polls under existing laws. This being so, the Democratic party has so excess for foreing the extra session, and it will be overwholmed by popular languaging in it stops the pay of the amy.

"The chief objection to the political section of the Army bill is that it was tacked to an Appropriation bill for the manifest and arowed purpose of cooreing the Executive assent to the radical change of the Bection laws it contemplates. Mr. Hayes attacks the vicious tacking practice with Prisserothy vigor and boldness. It is a method of great abuses. It opens a way for one House of Congress to override the oreogative of the other, or for both to break down and override the independence of the Executive. The history of the present measure exhibits this revolutionat measure exhibits this revolutiona-dency of the practice, which ds on the assumption that the having the origination of bills, has a right to withhold origination on which the existeace of the Government depends, un-less the Iresident shall assent to any leg-station a majority of the House may see fit to tack to an appropriation bill. Mr. Hayes has performed his duty with a bold-ness and vices that will companed him to programme and return to the only true rule of legislation, which excludes from appropriation bills all propositions whose object is not an appropriation of money, they may contrive to live down the dam-aging effect of another atupendous blun-der and another failure."

The Cincinnesi Commencial of the property of the con-

The Cincinnati Commercial (a paper of generally conservative tendencies), in the course of a long article upon the veto, makes the following significant comments upon it:

upon it:

"It is useless to conjecture what course the Democrats of the Senale and House will take. The caucus by whose action they have been bound may instruct for atherence to the bill, in the face of the rational objections of the President. They should think twice before obeying such a mandate. Having managed themselves into a predicament by setting up a pretense for their revolutionary proceedings which does not exist, there is only one road of safety for them—that of honorable retreat. If they persist in stopping the disbursement of money paid into the Treasury for the express purpose of carrying on the Government, because the President will not consent to approve a bill that denies to the ballot for National Representatives the protection of the civil authority of the articular than the civil authority of the articular and the civil authority of t resentatives the protection of the civil au thority of the nation, they make an issu-on which they will be more disastrous! beaten before the people than on an which they have made since 1800."

Not less interesting than these news paper expressions are the opinions utter ed by a number of Congressmen at Washington. For instance, Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, a prominent Democrat, is quote as follows:

"My views would not be worth anything. I have consulted with nobody. I can only speak my own opinion. As an original proposition, my judgment would have never led me into this position, but I am too obstinate, being in it, to ever surrender until, by Constitutional limitation, this Congress shall expire. I would, in the meantime, go out and chop wood, if necessary, to get along without the appropriation."

"But do you think the narty, as a whole

"But do you think the party, as a whole, would be of that opinion?"

Mr. Morrison—"I can not say. I presume the fellows that get up the Electoral Commission bill will plan some way of getting out of this scrape. Hayes would never have sent the message in, unless he knew he would be successful. It is simply a question of votes, and not many of them. Hayes was undoubtedly certain that he could get them. They must have been promised to him. Still it may not be possible for anybody to deliver the goods; and as the army and the rest of us won't. and as the army and the rest of us won't begin to be starved out for sixty days, there willabe along fight before any ad-justment is made."

Justment is made."

"Do you think, then, that the Southern men will ultimately back down?"

"No, sir; they must be used as cats' paws and go to the front. It will be the Northern men, who have factories, and stocks, and that sort of thing, and who fear the effect of it on the market, who will back down."

A Washington dispatch says that "th eeling among Democrats, as near as can be ascertained by inquiry among their eaders, is strongly in favor of passing the bill again without any change and sending it back for another veto. Then, the eaders say, the Democrats will have done their duty, and Congress will adjourn leaving the army, courts, and civil service of the Government without appropriations to sustain them.".
